

Modern Foreign Languages: French, German & Spanish

Overview of the Curriculum

Key Stage 3 (Years 7, 8 & 9)

All students study French in Year 7 and students are allocated either Spanish or German at the start of Year 8. Both French and the second language are continued until the end of Key Stage 3. Students arrive at Parmiter's from a large number of different schools and have studied a range of languages at Key Stage 2. French is the first language taught at Parmiter's, as we believe the majority of feeder schools are still likely to offer French to their students. Furthermore, the department has historically offered French to Year 7 students and therefore has the resources and the staffing to deliver this effectively to all students throughout Key Stage 3. We recognise the value of prior learning at Key Stage 2 and build on it when discussing language patterns, raising awareness of pronunciation and teaching grammatical terminology. The latter allows students to begin to describe how language is structured using the appropriate terms.

In Year 7 French and as they start their second language in Year 8, students are taught in mixed ability groups. At the start of the second year of learning each language, they are put into sets or bands according to ability. Setting remains in place throughout Key Stage 3 and 4, however, students' performance is reviewed after assessments and changes made when appropriate and possible.

The skills and linguistic knowledge we teach is introduced via topics relevant to each age group and on materials sourced from countries in which the different languages are spoken. These are related to children who are native speakers of the languages where possible. There is a focus on phonetics and how spelling and pronunciation are different to English. Students are introduced to the grammatical structure of languages, beginning with such aspects as the notion of gender in language systems and the need for adjectives to change according to gender and number.

The importance of embedding key vocabulary and concepts in long term memory is a focus of teaching and learning and thus certain key vocabulary, which is not topic specific eg: time phrases, opinion phrases, connectives, is taught and revisited to embed this in the memory. Learning strategies are discussed and students are encouraged to begin to use online resources to embed vocabulary effectively. Students begin to develop all four skill areas: listening, speaking, reading and writing. Decoding skills are developed by extracting details from short spoken and written texts. Writing and speaking tasks are based on topics covered and students start producing texts by adapting a model so as to express their ideas. Gradually students draw on resources and prior learning, rather than a model, to create their own short written and spoken texts. Cultural aspects of the countries where the languages are spoken are explored through the topics but also by discussing events and festivals as they occur.

As students progress through to the second year of learning, the notion of different tenses and the way in which these are formed is explored and students begin to recognise tense indicators and to produce texts using two or three different tenses. Key ideas eg: opinion phrases, time phrases and negatives are revisited and extended. Students are encouraged to draw on previously learned vocabulary to enhance their work and create more varied and longer pieces of the written and spoken language. Students are gradually required to undertake tasks from memory, beginning with listening and reading tasks and moving into the more active tasks of speaking and writing.

In Year 9 French, as well as increasing the range of topics and therefore vocabulary studied, students' knowledge of language itself is extended and students gain a greater awareness of linguistic terminology and structure. They recognise the importance of combining all four skills to ensure success in communication and understanding. Teachers of German and Spanish are able to capitalise on work done in Year 7 and 8 French and to encourage students to transfer the knowledge of language and the skills developed so as to move more quickly through the basics of the second language and reach a similar level of competency in all three languages by the end of the Key Stage and therefore allow a choice at GCSE of one or both languages studied at Key Stage 3.

GCSE - Key Stage 4 (Years 10 & 11)

Language learning is necessarily cyclical and at Key Stage 4 students revisit key grammatical structures and vocabulary. Our curriculum is, however, ambitious and where topics overlap with those studied at Key Stage 3, knowledge of vocabulary is extended to encompass the range needed for success at GCSE. Idioms and more complexity of structure are introduced and embedded through revisiting these and applying the new knowledge across topics wherever possible.

There is a focus on extending all four skills through practise in lessons and regular formative assessments which allow students and staff to gauge progress and to focus on aspects which require more development. As well as speaking activities in class, small group or individual sessions with the Foreign Language Assistants help provide a friendly opportunity for students to develop confidence in speaking and communicating effectively in the language. Writing tasks are scaffolded where necessary to support students who find some aspects of grammar challenging, but all students are now encouraged to write from memory with tasks adapted according to ability, linguistic experience and topics covered. Assessment also indicates which Tier a student is best suited to, Foundation or Higher, but equally allows those on the borderline between the tiers to analyse their performance and work on the points that will allow for progress to the Higher tier if this is within their capabilities. Students sit the AQA GCSE papers for languages as we believe these develop the skills that prepare students well for future language studies, either at A Level, in higher education, or indeed in the world of work.

A Level - Key Stage 5 (Years 12 & 13)

Students who have selected to extend their study beyond Key Stage 4 are given preparation work through the Summer Booklet, which aims to maintain a high level of competency in all skill areas and to widen their knowledge of culture in the countries in which the language is spoken. The AQA A Level syllabus covers topics that relate to these countries and not just to France, Spain or Germany. It examines current social issues of interest and relevance to young adults of today, allowing them to develop their understanding of factors that influence the social and political structures of different societies and cultures across the globe. It develops high level thinking skills, encouraging evaluation and analysis of themes covered. Students also study a literary text and a film. They consider the elements that combine to create an effective piece of literature or a successful film, thus developing cross-curricular knowledge. They examine themes and style and discuss how these relate to the contexts in which they are set. Students are also taught to manipulate the language to include higher levels of complexity and to combine idiom and structure to communicate in a clear and effective manner about both topics and texts. Individual sessions with the Foreign Language Assistants (all of whom are native speakers) develop work done in lessons and foster greater spoken accuracy. These enhance pronunciation and intonation, leading to an ambitious level of oral competency as well.

GCSE French, German, Spanish (Key Stage 4)

The AQA GCSE syllabus is used as the basis for topics and structures included in the schemes of work. All four skill areas: listening, reading, speaking and writing are tested at either Foundation or Higher level. The GCSE themes and topics are common to all three languages, as are the key grammatical structures and skills needed.

The main themes and topics are:

- Identity and culture: Family, friends, technology, free-time activities, customs and festivals
- Local, National, international and global areas of interest: Home, town and region, charity/volunteer work, healthy living, the environment, holidays and travel
- Current and future study and employment: Life at school/college, jobs and career choices, ambitions.

Grammar/structures and skills

- Basic grammatical structures required at GCSE are introduced and practised at Key Stage 3. These are revisited and extended to allow all students to embed the key structures in their long term memory.
- More complex structures and a greater variety of key phrases are introduced to allow a range of expressions to be used in speaking and writing tasks.
- When possible, regular speaking sessions with the foreign language assistants are organised to help students gain confidence, as well as competency, in speaking from memory and in communicating using the language and structures they have learned.
- Reading and listening tasks are practised to develop comprehension strategies and build confidence in decoding audio and written texts of increasing complexity.
- Examples of good written and spoken answers are modelled and analysed to ensure students understand the structures needed to access the highest grades of the tier for which they are entered and for those on the borderline, this provides an opportunity to understand how they might advance to the higher tier.

A Level French, German, Spanish (Key Stage 5)

- Students study the AQA A level syllabus in French, German or Spanish. The content is broadly the same for each language.
- As well as the topics listed below, students study a literary text and a film. They are expected to write an essay (approx. 300 words for each) in the language about the book and film, showing an ability to evaluate and analyse themes and techniques used.
- Students build on the structures covered in GCSE and then add higher levels of complexity, a wider range of idiom, tenses and mood and continue to extend their knowledge of linguistic terminology.
- All four skills are examined at A Level.
